

Seattle's newest waterfront public space has finally opened

Alyssa Therrien | Sep 21 2020, 3:44 pm

WaterfrontSEA/Twitter

Thanks to a partnership between the City of Seattle and Friends of Waterfront Seattle, Seattle's newest waterfront pier has finally opened.

ADVERTISEMENT

Pier 62, located on Seattle's future Waterfront Park, is a "revitalized historic pier offering flexible, active community space."

It's being promoted as a cultural hub of the waterfront, which bridges Pike Place Market and the Seattle Aquarium with space for activities and sweeping views.

• See also:

- Seattle's NEXUS tower receives prestigious Gold Nugget Award
- Three scooter companies have been given the green light in Seattle
- Enjoy a virtual commute on some of the most popular routes

The pier features a floating dock, as well as tables and chairs to rest at, and artwork to browse.

friendsofwaterfrontseattle
Central Waterfront, Seattle

View Profile

View More on Instagram

136 likes

Add a comment...

The rest of the Waterfront Park renovations are currently underway. More information on the project can be found at waterfrontparkseattle.org.

ADVERTISEMENT

ADVERTISEMENT

